CHAPTER XXXV.—ONE.

When I was a boy I possessed a pet owl. It was a source of amusement to me to feed that owl. When the trap had caught one of those night disturbers, I took it to the solemn owl, who at blinking the daylight half awake and half asleep, the owl at once gulped down the mouse, and then sat fast, with the mouse in her inside, but with the tail and the protruding from her beak. Ahem—an hour later I went to the owl, took hold of the end of the mouse's tail and pulled it, whereupon up the throat of the owl came the mouse, backwings, and the bird of wisdom was roused to wild wonder and profound puzzlement to account for the sudden disappearance of her meal.

"Fiddle-faddle!" said Mrs. Sidebottom, "it is all part of the business—it goes with widow's caps. When I lost Sidebottom I was worn to a shadow, and grieved, and grieved, and grieved."

"It will be very dull at this place you speak of."

"Of course it will be dull and quiet, but what about the house? I sacrifice myself for the sake of my husband and his wife, and yet Mrs. Lamb was no Quile. But it is the Quiles alone who would receive damages were they to return to life. Imagine the emotions produced in a hospital which has received a bequest of ten thousand pounds, and has spent fifteen guineas on the portrait of the benefactor, should the benefactor descend from the frame, declare himself alive, and require the return of his thousands. Think of the junior partner who, while writing all a seller-shaffed off his mortal coil to make room for him, how he would feel were the dead to return to life? Think of the curate waiting for the living, the next presentation to which is for him, should the rector, after having laid himself down in his grave, change his mind and get out and resume his benefice for another fifteen years?"

Mrs. Sidebottom had but just received news of the disappearance of Uncle Jeremiah, and, like an ungrateful child, she was at as little time as might be in examinations of the cause.

"She must have been uncertain, and asked advice how to get out of a difficulty. Like one who has tredou in mire, she pulled her leg instantaneously to set it on dry and firm ground."

"I don't know why the law stands, and whether the sentence of the Court of Probate can be reversed," she said, "but of one thing I am very sure—that the wife has had to go."

"The captain burst out laughing."

"This is no laughing matter," said his mother, testily. "How can you be such a byssen? Jeremiah has reappeared at Margravroyd, and that is well, I can't mind matters—the devil take him! I only want to relate what we have distributed between us, and will, of course, with the business, he will take back under his control, and out of the supply there. That is a serious matter—and then there is the money he left."

"Which I suppose he will require you to return."

"Which I can't and won't return. Bless me, Lamb, what a state of things! Our income reduced, and even the profits of the business to one-sixth, which is not much, but, as the comes to me under the circumstances, I must leave at once."

"I shall know nothing more about Captain Pennycomquick—to be correct, Pennycommeek—look the letter and read it with a smile."

"It was short."

"Dear Louis—I am back, heartily again. I have been to Algiers for my health. I had rheumatism, and when I came round I found you had already pronounced me dead, and had divided the spoils—concerning which, a word later."

"I have your foot—no, Lamb; for, in fact, I have your foot."

"How do you know that he is back, and that this is not a false alarm?"

"Look here—" She tossed a letter to him.

"It is Ionic! He wrote it with a singer—I know he did. Jeremiah never liked me. He has disappeared, and has come to life again, out of spite."

Captain Pennycomquick—to be correct, Pennycommeek—took the letter and read it with a smile."

"Philip's experiences had not the faintest desire to spend a winter in Algiers; she thought Mentone, or Florence, or Pau would suit her better, according to where she could get into the best society, and she resolved to leave the determination to the future. If she found during the summer people whom she was visiting anywhere abroad she would attach herself to them. But with that dubious crookedness which prevails in some nairies, she went about asking questions about hotels and pensions at Algiers, keeping her ears open at the same time to persons of position who were likely to winter elsewhere. It was possible that, if she made it well known that she would winter with those who were wintering elsewhere, she would be invited to do so. And it would be a great service to Jeremiah, as his domestic relations are my own."

"You cry out before you are hurt," retorted Jeremiah. "I am not about to interfere, I know that you are greatly disconcerted at the discovery as to the parentage of your wife."

"Philip held up his head stiffly and closed his eyes. "My wife," he said, "is Philip's shortly."

"With regard to myself, I will speak."

"With regard to myself, I will speak," said Philip, laughingly. "The mill is my affair, my domestic relations are my own."
